

ANTIQUE RIVER LOGS®
OLD GROWTH FOREST

TRANSFORMING RECLAIMED TIMBERS INTO MODERN GOODS.

Everyone has a story.

Every thing has a story, a path it has worn and a life it has lived.

This story lives intertwined with the stories of others,
with roots that run back for centuries.

It begins

in an Old-Growth Forest, where ancient trees
grew untouched for hundreds of years—
long before the first colonists stepped foot in the New World.

At the turn of the 18th century,

Grave men

who yearned for new beginnings harvested these timbers and risked their lives to ride them downriver to sawmills.

As the logs traveled downstream, many broke loose from their log rafts and were lost. Surrendering to the forces of the river, they settled on the river bottom, waiting for time to erode their entire existence.

However, this is not where the story ends.

With Humbleness,

reverence and dedication, we resurrect these magnificent logs that have been preserved by the cool, dark waters. In this unique environment, they have been transformed by minerals and time, and have developed the colors, patina, and grain that distinguish them from any other type of reclaimed wood.

Using the finest craftsmanship, we transform them into products that are works of art—works of art with a purpose.

It is a purpose that fulfills their journey, a purpose that completes this Lost Harvest.

Though the harvest is finally fulfilled,
the story is far from over.

Its story intertwines with ours,
and ours with yours,
and yours with your patrons.

For this is a story that lives forever.

*This is a story about
Antique River Logs®.*

While searching for lost logs, hand-hewn railroad cross ties are occasionally found on the riverbed. In the late 1800s, these railroad cross ties were transported by river in a fashion similar to that of log rafts. These cross ties are usually oak and feature extra dark coloring from being exposed (on at least three sides) to the minerals and sediments. Due to their rarity, Antique River Logs® reserves this wood for small, finely crafted objects.

WOOD

By the time the logs are reclaimed from the river, many of their defining features have long since vanished. Stripped of their bark, sap, leaves, and branches, and with their color often changed, logs are nearly impossible to identify. That's why we partner with our friends and wood technologists at Iowa State University.

Before any production begins, we send a small sample from each log to be carefully analyzed for proper species identification. Knowing the species of each tree provides us with the information for each product's certificate of authenticity and allows us to use each log in products that will showcase their natural beauty and properties.

CONSUMER PROFILE + PROFITABILITY

Created from the logs of an Old Growth Forest, untouched and undisturbed for millennia, our products connect with those who appreciate one-of-a-kind pieces, with a story from a company that they can stand behind. With our blend of history, nature, and craftsmanship, Antique River Logs products appeal to customers with the following interests:

SUSTAINABILITY

Antique River Logs works with agencies to responsibly produce environmentally sustainable products without the consumption of living trees and forests.

We partner with Kentucky Fish and Game, the Kentucky Division of Forestry, and the U.S. Corps of Engineers to responsibly harvest aqua-reclaimed wood.

OUR COMPANY

In business and life, we value relationships over profit, commitment over convenience, and the long view of sustainability over immediate gains. Staying true to these values, our products simply seek to honor the river logs, their history, and their legacy.

In 2006, William Joiner and his father Captain Bill Joiner founded Antique River Logs in Bowling Green, Kentucky. William, the now fifth-generation river man, shares a deep connection to the rivers he explores. Antique River Logs stems from an intersection of his love for history, family, artistry, and sustainability.

“Never doubt that a small group of thoughtful, committed citizens can change the world. Indeed it’s the only thing that ever has.”

- Margaret Mead
